

For 37 years, unwanted and coerced abortions have endangered the rights and lives of both the unborn and women ...

Most abortions are unwanted or coerced. Many are forced.

It is not just in extreme cases or oppressive countries. It happens here. To women you may know.

Coercion can come from all sides: from a woman's partner or parents, her doctor, employer, counselor, advisors, a religious leader or others she trusts. She may be a victim of abuse or discrimination, or face losing her job, education, home or children.

She may even lose her life—women have been assaulted or killed for refusing to abort. If she does abort, she faces the risk of physical and emotional injury and trauma, including a higher risk of suicide.

... that's 37 years too long.

“Your baby is dying tonight.” An Arkansas woman heard these words from the men her boyfriend hired to beat her to cause a miscarriage, just days before her delivery date.

“Our mom had made my sister have an abortion. My sister became a completely different person. She attempted suicide at least three times ...”

“His family pushed for the abortion, because I was in their home and they had to help care for my children while I was bedridden ... I felt obligated, totally helpless.”

“My husband insisted on the abortion. ... A part of me died that day.”
